Making a custom invoice In this project, you will create an invoice for your new business. The invoice should include a picture of your new company, the company's name, contact information, and address. In addition, the invoice should have a column where you can enter your payment information, such as the amount you paid, the amount owed, the address to mail a check to, and the address and phone number to call for questions. You will need to create the following projects: 1. Sketching an invoice In this project, you will sketch a new company logo and design an invoice that can be used as a template in the future. 2. Creating an invoice In this project, you will create an invoice using the design you drew in the previous project, choosing the correct graphics and file formats for your new business. The goal of this project is to create a template that can be reused when you begin operating your new business.

5 Best alternatives to Photoshop Elements It can be very easy to get confused and wonder which image editor is the best! After all, at the end of the day, the overall workflow for photoshop is amazing! There are a few points to consider when choosing your favorite editing tool. While the overarching design principles are the same in most image editors, the software in use often gives editors the edge over their competitors in various areas. You can get a bit of that same edge and quality with Photoshop Elements. 1. Adobe Photoshop Lightroom and Adobe Photoshop The features Adobe Photoshop Lightroom gives you are easy to spot, for example importing photos from a DSLR and comparing them right away in one single click. If you want to work on a large image, you can drag and drop images, panels, and navigate to different areas of an image with ease. Adobe Photoshop doesn't give you any plugins to import other files besides Photoshop files. If you import a file with layers, you have to copy the layers in Photoshop. Features: Importing and organizing photographs Picking out details Comparison of file types Making adjustments to images Creation of text and stickers Edit photos with easy automatic adjustment, adding filters Integration with other tools Using filters Using presets Editing of layers Using catalogs With their CS6 software, they not only offer the same features in their latest version as Photoshop CS6, but also even more functions. Notepad++, an open source text editor, is a text editor for Windows. But, there's much more to it than that. Notepad++ is a free full-featured, highly customizable, cross-platform, lightweight, text editor for programmers and system administrators. It is an editor for Java, C, C++, PHP, ASP, HTML, XML, JavaScript, SQL, Unix shell scripts and batch files. The languages available can make it a great tool for editing images. With this editor you can create a new image, split, merge, and invert layers, select parts of images, and more. You can even create a copy of images with different layers. 2. Q: Swift: how to connect an action with a @IBAction property? I want to connect my @IBAction properties with a UIButton. I put: @IBAction func changeFontButtonPressed(sender: AnyObject) { print("button Pressed") } in the class of the UITableViewCell. In the superclass, I declare: @IBAction func changeFontButtonPressed(sender: AnyObject) { But when I click on the button I get: Thread 1: EXC_BAD_ACCESS (code=EXC_I386_GPFLT) Could you show me the correct place for putting this code. A: When a cell is dequeued, you can only set a cell's function in the cellForRowAtIndexPath method in the UITableViewDelegate, not in the UITableViewDataSource. Why? There's no guarantee that the cell that the table view just dequeued will still be in the table view, or even that a cell at the same index will be in the table view. So you can't rely on the cell to be in a particular state or event once you return it from the cellForRowAtIndexPath method. You can set a cell's IBAction in the cellForRowAtIndexPath method, and it'll call the action when the cell is being shown, but you have no way of knowing when that will be (if it happens at all) since the data source is out of your control. You're best off setting the IBAction in the data source, where you at least have the data to work with to determine whether a particular action should happen, and setting the cell's tag to that same data so you can pull it out in the dequeuing method to see if the IBAction should be called. You can use tag/keypaths as well, but that's usually much more work to set up and maintain, so I'd recommend just using the data source method. As millions of women and girls around the world prepare to gather in Washington, DC, for the March for Women's Lives on Friday, Dan Lamothe highlights the national implications of a study released this week showing that white women between the ages of 15 and 39 no longer live longer than black women in the same age range. You can watch the video above to see Lamothe's take on these findings, as well as weigh in on the importance of this research to your personal health care decisions and what you can do to help advance reproductive rights and justice. "If you can't afford birth control, you can't have sex" The study, published in the New England Journal of Medicine, shows that the life expectancy gap between white and black women has widened over the past few decades. It finds that the life expectancy for white women is six years less than that of black women in the same age range, while the gap was five years smaller 20 years ago. According to the report's lead author, David A. Barker, the role of prevention has been obscured in the media coverage that has followed the study. "We're all talking about women's health," he said in a news release, "but it's important to recognize that a major reason black women are living shorter lives is because of their higher rates of smoking and other risk factors." According to a press release issued by the study's other authors, the main factor driving the widening gap is high rates of smoking and poor health among black women. Other important contributors to the gap in life expectancy include the fact that black women and girls are disproportionately affected by the HIV epidemic, have poorer access to preventive services and higher rates of stillbirths, and live in communities with fewer resources. Finding is a wake-up call: Even if you're as well-prepared as you can be As this study illustrates, health disparities are persistent, and the reasons they persist are longstanding and complex, according to a press release issued by the National Partnership for Women and Families. "The research also shows that if you can't afford birth control, you can't have sex," the press release reads. "That's as true today as it was in 1960." Young men of color are the least prepared to avoid pregnancy. According
